New way to buy software

Personal Computing , Sep 1982 , v6 n9 p26+, 2 pages

ISSN: 0192-5490

Describes a software marketing program that allows a customer to pay $49.95 for a demonstration software package. Should the customer want to purchase the package he calls the computer store for the instructions to unlock the program.

AB- Explains how the music industry is encouraging consumers to download free music as an e-commerce strategy that will lead to increased music sales, merchandising, and advertising. Examines Launch Media Inc., which offers to registered users free downloads of music playable on Microsoft Corp.'s Windows Media Player. Says that this approach generates site traffic and ad sales and results in repeat business. Comments that record companies tried to quash MP3, the audio compression format that allows distribution of music on the Internet, but now are taking a lesson from it to form their own marketing strategies. Concludes that online music vendors are promoting free, legal music downloads just as some software companies release free products to create demand elsewhere. Includes one sidebar.
